INDUSTRIAL CONTRACTORS CHALK UP OUTSTANDING SAFETY RECORD

Industrial contractors working at TRMA member companies set another record in 2009 in protecting their workers from accidents and injuries. Moreover, their safety record is far superior when compared to data for work site categories established by the Occupational Safety and Health Administration (OSHA) in 2008 (the latest data available).

For example, contractors working at TRMA-member plants in 2009 had an overall injury incidence rate of 0.27 per 100 workers (it was 0.45 in 2008). That compares to OSHA recorded incidences of 5.0 for manufacturing in general, 2.7 for chemical manufacturers, 5.1 for specialty trades, and 3.9 for private industry.

Nearly four dozen contractors were honored at the annual TRMA membership dinner held April 29, 2010. In announcing the recipients, Rick Szalach, TRMA chairman and refinery manager at ExxonMobil Joliet Refinery, "You're just hitting the ball out of the park year after year," noting the special challenges of performing construction and maintenance work in manufacturing environments.

Three contractors received the platinum award, the highest recognition by TRMA. Diamond Unlimited, Inc. worked 2 million man-hours over the past 13 years without recording a single injury! BMW Constructors, Inc. recorded an incidence rate of 0.39, working 2.5 million man-hours over the past seven years and Meade Co., Inc. recorded an incidence rate of 0.48, working 1.5 million man-hours, also over the past seven years.

Gold award winners recorded a 25 percent improvement in safety performance over the average of the prior three years and meritorious recipients recorded no injuries in 2009 while working at TRMA-member plants. In addition, five TRMA members received the partnership award for the safety performance of their own employees in addition to those of contractors working at their plants. (A complete list of award winners is on page two).

Business in Washington prevented OSHA Area Director Gary Anderson from making remarks at the awards dinner, but he sent his congratulations. "There is no resource as important as our employees and you have devoted your time, energy and innovation to eliminating hazards, thoroughly training your employees in safe work practices and creating a work environment where safety is number one," he wrote.

This is somewhat unusual, said Anderson, since many companies he comes in contact with "don't get it yet," but he has hope. "We still have a long way to go, but with employers dedicated to safety like yourselves, who can 'spread the word' and serve as mentors to others, we certainly expect the (injury) rates to continue to decline," he said.

In addition, highlights of the 2009 accomplishments and plans for 2010 were discussed. The 2010 plans include continue support of the core business; increased advocacy in the public policy arena tracking legislative and regulatory issues that impact the membership; and seeking the input of the membership in the development of the strategic plan for the next three years. Rick Szalach encouraged members to support these initiatives and be active participants in the strategic plan development.

Ask Jerry Caamano:

Q: At the recent annual dinner, Chairman Rick Szalach mentioned that TRMA wants to determine how to add better value for members. What does the organization have in mind?

A: TRMA must periodically re-assess its programs and services just as our member companies analyze whether existing goals and strategies are achieving desired results. The world changes and TRMA's approach may be meeting the needs of our members, only partially or not at all. We certainly don't perceive the latter to be true, but we want to hear directly from you about issues you face and how the association might help. After all, we've been meeting the needs of our members for 77 years and we want to continue.

To help us to better help you, a professional facilitator was retained to conduct five focus groups this summer to collect data about whether current TRMA programs and services are meeting your needs. Each focus group will be structured to ensure that participants represent a cross-section of the membership. Each session will last 90 minutes. No preparation will be required and all feedback will remain confidential.

Additionally, the facilitators will conduct telephone interviews of non-members to determine their familiarity with TRMA and why they don't belong. Interviews will be conducted with TRMA members who are not active to find out why.

We are excited about this process and look forward to sharing the results with you. As Chairman Szalach said at the annual dinner, "What we want to be is what you want us to be."
